8.2 Teamwork and collaboration with others

TEAMWORK/ COLLABORATION JAN VAN EYCK ACADEMIE (2005-2006)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Spectre of the Avant-Garde Against the dominant outright anti-avant-gardist Zeitgeist, a team of researchers of the Theory Department of the Jan van Eyck Academie argued that if cultural production wants to regain its impact on society, the Denkverbot on the possibility of an avant-garde praxis has to be broken. This project aimed at localising concrete aesthetical strategies within different cultural disciplines (film, architecture, theory and popular media) that had a significant impact on our contemporary (understanding of) society. Two research meetings were held in preparation for a conference, Cultural Activism Today: Strategies of Over-Identification (19 January 2006, Stedelijk Museum CS, Amsterdam, NL). I presented a paper during the first research meeting (12 April 2005), which was subsequently published in the Belgian journal, Andere Sinema. (See http://www.bavo.biz) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Lend me your dream/Lend me your fantasy Under the auspices of Super! 1st Triennial for Contemporary Art, Fashion and Design, the Jan van Eyck Academie and the Academy for Fine Arts Maastricht organised three debating evenings on the city as platform for cultural engagement. I participated in the first debate (12 September 2005) as member of the panel of four invited experts and attended the other debates on 14 October and 4 November.

• Ethical Subjectivity and Agency: Foucault and his Interlocutors

A collaborative research project initiated by myself in conjunction with the universities of Exeter and Staffordshire that focused on the relation between ethical subjectivity and agency. Despite postmodernist and poststructuralist scepticism about the individual or “the human subject”, the later Foucault’s turn to ethics also seems to signal a return to the individual understood as “exerting power”, the subject of power (freedom, choice, will, intentionality) instead of merely the object or outcome of power. This study sought to extend this question by exploring Foucault’s relation to thinkers in the phenomenological tradition. How is the ethical subject’s agency affected if ethical subjectivity is conceived in terms of “sensibility” – as in the later Levinas, for example. This line of inquiry led to three workshops hosted by the Jan van Eyck Academy in 2005.

• The Veil – Image, Text, Meaning

This was a collaborative project initiated by Dr Eva Meyer, an advising researcher in the Theory Department and involved six researchers from both the Theory and Fine Arts Departments of the Jan van Eyck Academie. It investigated the socio-political, epistemological and emotional significance of the veil in all its historical and cross-cultural incarnations from an interdisciplinary perspective. My own contribution consisted in an exploration of the topic from two different angles: the first departs from Schopenhauer’s conception of the “veil of maya” and concludes with a retaking of his Kantian premises from a Foucaultian perspective – especially his essays on Kant found in The Politics of Truth. It thus uses the notion of the veil to move from the autonomous will to a “critical ontology of ourselves”. The second approach looked at the thematics from Levinas’s perspective on suffering, death and the Other. A public seminar was held (21 June 2006) and contributions were published in an edited volume in 2010.

• The Pensive Image

This was a collaborative research project initiated by Dr Hanneke Grootenboer, an advising researcher in the Theory Department. It investigated the extent to which images (painting, photography, cinema, etc.) are able to philosophise on the status of their own representation, and on the nature of vision. The project was based on the hypothesis that monocular models of vision such as perspective and the camera have shaped our binocular perception of the world.

Apart from the two-weekly research seminars held from 2005-2006, we also collaborated on a special theme issue of the Belgian e-journal, Image & Narrative.

TEAMWORK/
COLLABORATION
UNIVERSITY OF PRETORIA
(2007-2008)

• Collaboration as Research Fellow

Title of project: The Spectre of Ethical Agency after the “Death of Man”. The Ethical Significance and Contemporary Pertinence of Radical Passivity in the Philosophy of Emmanuel Levinas

This project involved the expertise of a team of scholars:

Primary research team:

Research supervisor: Prof M J Schoeman, Associate professor, Department of Philosophy, UP

Research leader: Dr A B Hofmeyr, Post-doctoral fellow, Department of Philosophy, UP

Levinas specialist: Dr E Wolff, Senior lecturer, Department of Philosophy, UP

Student participation: 3 M- and D-students

Advisers: Prof Deon Rossouw (HoD, Department of Philosophy, UP), Prof Philippe van Haute, Department of Philosophical Anthropology, Faculty of Philosophy, Radboud University Nijmegen, NL; Prof Rudi Visker (Professor, Higher Institute of Philosophy, University of Leuven, BE), Prof Roger Burggraeve (Faculty of Theology, University of Leuven, BE), Dr Stella Sandford (Senior lecturer, Department of Philosophy, Middlesex University (now Kingston), UK), and Dr Chris Bremmers

(Universitair Hoofdocent, Faculty of Philosophy, Radboud University Nijmegen).

- Organisation of the Annual Conference of The Philosophical Society of Southern Africa (15-17 January 2008)

Leading a team of academic advisers (members of our department and external (inter-) national referees), members of the administrative staff (ranging from Marketing to the Centenary Committee) and a team of student assistants, I was responsible for organising the annual conference of The Philosophical Society of Southern Africa as the inaugural event of the University of Pretoria's centenary celebrations. The conference featured two internationally renowned keynote speakers and over sixty paper presentations from participants from across Southern Africa, Europe, the UK and the US. CONFERENCE ORGANISATION
16-18 JANUARY 2008	Annual Conference of the Philosophical Society of South Africa, University of Pretoria, Pretoria, ZA (www.karbonblack.com/tuks/) Keynote Speakers: Prof. David Farrell Krell (De Paul University, Chicago, US) and Prof. Rudi Visker (Catholic University of Leuven, Belgium)
24 NOVEMBER 2006	Colloquium: "Radical passivity: Rethinking ethical agency in Levinas" (hosted by the Jan van Eyck Academie and organised by myself). http://radical.janvaneyck.nl/ The colloquium consisted in a critical assessment of the precarious status of the ethical agent and related problems of moral philosophy today – both from a Levinasian and Kantian perspective. Participants: Prof. Adriaan Pepersak (Loyola, US); Prof. Alphonso Lingis (Penn State, US); Prof. Bettina Bergo (Montreal, Canada), Prof. Seán Hand (Warwick, UK), Benda Hofmeyr and four invited respondents. * Publication : Springer International Academic Publishers, 2009.
3 NOVEMBER 2006	Colloquium: "THE WAL-MART PHENOMENON: Resisting Neo-liberal Power through Art, Design and Theory". (hosted by the Jan van Eyck Academie, conceived and organised by myself). http://walmart.janvaneyck.nl/ Robert Greenwald's film, "WAL-MART The high cost of low price" was employed as critical platform to discuss the workings of neo-liberal power and possible strategies of resistance. The focus was both on the media used to reflect upon these phenomena and the actual socio-political and economic processes underlying them. Contributions: (1) neo-liberal power's evolution (Benda Hofmeyr); (2) its various incarnations in and effects on the built-environment (BAVO, independent research team focussing on the political dimension of cultural production);

- (3) its impact on public space (Daniël van der Velden, advising researcher, JvE Academie);
- (4) the effects of economic processes on the social and urban landscape (spatial development) from the perspective of social geography (Prof. Erik Swyngedouw, Oxford University, UK); and
- (5) the complexity of documentary approaches in visual arts production (Hito Steyerl, film maker and theoretician).

11. AWARDS AND SCIENTIFIC/SCHOLARLY RECOGNITION

11.1 Evaluation status as scientist

(e.g. NRF; first evaluation and date, subsequent evaluations and dates)

First NRF rating awarded in 2012-2017; second rating (2018-2023)

11.2 Research awards and prizes

In 2007 I was awarded the prestigious Veni-grant (Innovational Research Incentives Scheme) from the NWO (Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research). Recipients of this award are recognised as pioneering researchers in their field (among the top 10% of their age group) (http://www.nwo.nl/nwohome.nsf/pages/NWOA_4YJDQ3_Eng). This award enabled me to continue my research in the broad field of Continental practical philosophy and ensured an ongoing research affiliation with the RU (specifically the Department of Philosophical Anthropology, Faculty of Philosophy). Apart from the Veni-grant, I received the Dr. I.B.M. Frye Fellowship from RU for outstanding female promovendi in 2003 and the Exceptional Young Researcher Award from UP in 2010. In addition to these awards, my consistent research excellence has been recognised by way of numerous scholarships awarded annually from 1996-2012 by both national and international research organisations and institutions (including the Nederlands Zuid-Afrikaanse Studiestichting (NL); the Prins Bernhard Cultuurfonds, (NL); Dutch Ministry of Education, Culture and Science (Netherlands Organisation for International Cooperation in Higher Education (NUFFIC)); National Research Foundation (ZA); University of Pretoria; Radboud University Nijmegen; Fonds voor Beeldende Kunsten, Vormgeving en Bouwkunst (NL), etc.).

12. SELF-EVALUATION

12.1. Teaching

(1) Short overview of teaching experience

I have extensively been involved in the teaching of undergraduate and postgraduate courses at various institutions for the past twelve years. Most of my undergraduate teaching has taken place on 2nd and 3rd year Bachelor level in core fields of Philosophy (Cognitive Philosophy (FIL 253); the History of Modern and Postmodern Continental Philosophy (FIL 210), and Philosophical Anthropology (FIL 310)) with the exception of my involvement in the teaching and curriculum design of a Philosophy enrichment module to Town and City Planners (FIL 355). Since 2008 I have been responsible for the teaching of an Honours module (equivalent to modules taught at the level of the Dutch Research Master programme) in Contemporary Continental Philosophy (FIL 712) redesigned each year to spark critical discussion on current affairs and the burning issues of the day. I have also had the opportunity to teach three semester courses at Research Master level at the Faculty of Philosophy at the Radboud University of Nijmegen. In addition, I presented an enrichment module to UP Psychology students (NSK 802) from 2008-2016 and guest lectures for the Centre for Responsible Leadership of the Faculty of Economic and Management Sciences, UP both at Master's level. I have also taught in national and international interdisciplinary contexts at the postgraduate level including the Jan van Ecyk Academie, Maastrich, NL (2005-2006), the Amsterdam School of the Arts (2007) and the Gordon Institute of Business Science (2010). For full details, please see the relevant sections of my CV above.

(2) Teaching strategy

The diverse nature of my teaching experience at various levels at local and international academic institutions within both disciplinary and interdisciplinary contexts have presented me with an array of challenges which afforded me the opportunity to hone my teaching skills accordingly.

WITHIN DISCIPLINARY CONTEXTS AT UNDERGRADUATE LEVEL: A fundamental challenge facing Philosophy lecturers in South Africa is the fact that students (even at the 2nd year level; native and non-native speakers alike) still grapple with fundamental reading, writing and comprehension deficits. Moreover, experts in the field of pedagogy agree that language proficiency, more than any other competency, is the strongest indicator of long-term academic success. I therefore take these skills to be my primary teaching objective and focus on four key learner outcomes: (1) learn to read and comprehend primary philosophical texts: difficult reading imparts sophisticated comprehension skills informed by a philosophical hermeneutic approach; (2) learn to write philosophical essays: sound critical thinking is vested in the ability to write; by writing your thoughts down you are forced to reflect upon and systematise them. Finally, and perhaps most importantly, (3) learn to discern: the unchecked proliferation of information within this technological era necessitates the ability to distinguish between relevant and irrelevant information, as well as between mere information and what constitutes knowledge or ideas; (4) impart the critical self-reflective capacity to reflect on the entanglement of the canons of European and African philosophies that particularly inform Postcolonial African philosophy in such a way as to make it place-specific and context-relevant.

The sophisticated and theoretical nature of my discipline, more often than not first encountered at a tertiary level, necessitates extensive utilisation of instructional scaffolding up to 3rd year Bachelor level. Apart from an interactive, discussion-based lecturing style aimed at getting to know individual learners (as far as is possible depending on class sizes), I rely heavily on support structures. Effective teaching, in my experience, is a collective and multi-faceted endeavour. Our departmental tutors fulfil a crucial role in this regard. As tutor coordinator (2009-2012), I oversaw an exhaustive undergraduate tutoring system consisting in weekly group tutorials as well as one-on-one tuition for individuals with special needs or facing particular challenges. In addition, the extensive utilisation of an array of instructional media (including the study guide, Blackboard, film, Powerpoint presentations, online learning platforms etc.) as well as divergent assessment methods are both aimed at catering to a diverse population of learners with differing learning and assessment competencies. Having said that, essay-type questions remain the preferred method of assessment for Philosophy students, since it teaches learners to select, synthesise and interpret complex material. I have learnt that throughput rates at undergraduate level are greatly improved by taking the necessary care with assessments: I always strive to provide learners with a high frequency of assessment opportunities assigning more weight as the course nears its end. I believe assessment criteria should be clearly communicated and sufficient feedback and opportunities for the perusal of marked assignments and tests should be provided. Finally, as 3rd year Bachelor lecturer, I invest a great deal of time and attention in identifying and encouraging strong candidates to pursue postgraduate studies. This happens by way of individual appointments and personalised letters of acknowledgment of potential, as well as the writing of testimonials upon request.

WITHIN DISCIPLINARY CONTEXTS AT POSTGRADUATE LEVEL: I utilise my teaching at Honours and Master's level as well as my research supervision as an incubator for my own research. At the postgraduate level, my formal lectures are always conducted within extended contact sessions (3-4 hours) that take the form of intermittent lectures and interactive seminars. This is an ideal platform for the cross-pollination of ideas as well as the application of theory on a theme of evident everyday relevance. In this way, learners are exposed to the latest multi-perspectival research on a particular topic, while my research, in turn, benefits from their critical input. Assessment takes place either in the format of oral presentations of research papers developed in the course of the module, or written assignments. In the case of the latter, an initial and final submission of the assignment ensures critical feedback while still in the process of development.

WITHIN INTERDISCIPLINARY CONTEXTS: My disciplinary teaching has benefited greatly from skills acquired in interdisciplinary (as well as service learning) contexts where I had to find ways to convey complex philosophical ideas to non-specialist audiences, and, moreover, make these concepts relevant to their concerns. This puts one's own comprehension to the utmost test and teaches one to structure learning materials in a logical, clear and jargon-free way. How these skills have impacted upon my teaching is perhaps most evident in the way in which my ability to develop new curricula has improved over the years. It has, for example, culminated in the development of (with two other colleagues within the faculty) a new MA programme in 'African-European Cultural Relations' in close collaboration with the University of Konstanz in Germany. I have also been jointly responsible for mentoring the exchange students from Konstanz and other African and European countries.

(3) Teaching as learning opportunity

Teaching, perhaps more than any other academic endeavour, is a learning opportunity. I therefore invest a great deal of time in teaching and learning, as well as education innovation by way of workshops and faculty based experts meetings. I organise a biannual postgraduate research seminar in our department and regularly participate in and contribute to our departmental Philosophy discussion group.

(4) Postgraduate supervision

At present I am supervising one Hons, one Master's and one PhD candidate in Philosophy. Within the context of South Africa, not many of our undergraduate students consider pursuing Philosophy at a postgraduate level as a viable route to enable them to find employment. This is reflected in the limited number of postgraduate students being supervised in a department.

(5) Student feedback & assessment

I have consistently and at all levels of teaching been rated by students above 4.5 out of 5 (sample student evaluations are included in this application).

12.2 Research(1) DESCRIPTION OF COMPLETED RESEARCH

From the moment I discovered Philosophy I was struck by its critical emancipatory potential – its emancipatory potential following from its critical force. For all its biases, Western Continental philosophy teaches a collection of answers to some pretty profound questions. The question in our present postcolonial context is whether the constituency of our intellectual endeavours – specifically also the students that we are teaching – are able to understand the questions, which we are addressing with our answers. Knowledge – and thereby I mean understanding – is a function of the sociology that necessitates it. As Van Binsbergen puts it: 'it is pointless to study the contents of a philosophy in isolation – in vitro – without constant reference to the particular sociology of knowledge by which it came into being and by which it is perpetuated'. What is necessary for true understanding is being able to self-reflectively connect (1) knowledge of the sociological ground of knowledge production with (2) the modes of knowledge so produced and pursued. My research pilgrimage reflects a wrestling with ethical and political conceptual toolkits and an persistent need and repeated attempts to put them to work within the context of our lived experience. The prevailing theme throughout is the relation between the Self and the Other and how their entanglement is complicated by the fact that they are always and necessarily bound to specific contextual forces and limitations.

Hence my GENERAL RESEARCH FOCUS falls within the field of Practical Continental Philosophy, which should be understood in the two-pronged Aristotelian sense as referring to "Ethics" on the one hand, and "Politics" on the other. My doctoral research (completed in 2005) remains a pertinacious influence. Therein I came to a more specific understanding of ethics in terms of the work of two contemporary French philosophers, Michel Foucault and Emmanuel Levinas. In the work of Foucault, ethics is reconceptualized as the self-transformative labour through which the individual crafts him-/herself into an ethical subject. It therefore concerns the self's relationship to him-/herself mediated by external frames of meaning-giving reference such as parental, societal and/or religious guidelines or prescriptive codes. Ethics as understood by Levinas, on the other hand, is primarily defined in terms of the self's responsibility to others. Ethical action becomes possible when I put the interest of the other person before my own. Following Spinoza, Levinas argues that the pursuit of one's own interest is absolutely necessary for persistence in being, for survival. The possibility of ethical action only becomes possible, however, when this drive to self-actualise is momentarily suspended – a moment of radical passivity – when one becomes capable of recognising the needs of the other person. By way of a functional analogy, I attempted to think these two seemingly opposing approaches to ethics dialectically and came to the conclusion that self-concern is a necessary condition for other-responsiveness. In short, with the aid of an innovative comparative methodology, I came to the realization that self-centred and other-centred ethics are two essentially interdependent sides of the same coin.

To come to a deeper understanding of these two complex positions, my subsequent research focused on them independently of each other, while incorporating the insights gained through the comparative approach. It resulted in two mutually independent but complementary lines of critical scholarship: (1) a FOUCAULTIAN investigation of the political dimension of ethics, which supposes a critical engagement with the world beyond the self; and (2) a LEVINASSIAN investigation of the conditions of possibility of ethical action. In the process, the discovery of the inextricable entanglement of the ethical and the political, of theory and practice, led to the emergence of a third line of scholarship: (3) the ETHICO-POLITICAL side. In short, my research may be understood as the consistent development of the complexities and complementarities of the political and ethical dimensions of self-other relations within the (modern and contemporary Continental tradition).

(2) THE POLITICAL (FOUCAULTIAN) SIDE: this line of inquiry was first pursued at the Jan van Eyck Academie, Maastricht, NL (2005-2006). It takes as its point of departure Foucault's Nietzschean conviction and injunction that life itself should be taken as a work of art. An aesthetics of existence entails a stylisation of one's being through transgressive, self-transformative labour that facilitates resistance to normalising power. It is therefore primarily concerned with the political or engaged dimension of ethical self-labour. Such an inquiry necessitates an engagement with the present. What are we today? How does our historical present – understood as a time in which neo-liberalism reigns supreme – impact upon our possibilities for being and acting in the world?

EXAMPLES OF REPRESENTATIVE OUTPUTS: My inquiry into the culture and subjectivity of neoliberal governmentality (Phronimon, 2011) may be understood under this rubric. Like most concepts in Foucault's diagnostic toolkit, governmentality is an analytical notion closely linked to changing historical rationalities of power, rather than a rigid descriptive mechanism that establishes one rationality of governing once and for all, that is the same for all times and places, and that infuses political orders in predictable, regular and uniform ways. This article utilises a historical approach in which one epoch, notion or governing rationality is understood in terms of that which precedes it, acknowledging some continuity while respecting and reflecting on discontinuity and differences.

Other outputs that fall under this rubric include my analysis of the present state of the Humanities in SA (Journal of Humanities, 2012), as well as my critical attempt to grapple with the public role the intellectual today (Litnet, 2009).

(2) THE ETHICAL (LEVINASSIAN) SIDE: this line of inquiry formed the focal point of my Veni-research project (2007-2012), which took as its point of departure Levinas's conviction that a preconscious ('passive') obligation towards others preceding any conscious choice, is decisive for ethical action. Levinas's ethical metaphysics is essentially a meditation on what makes ethical agency possible – what is it that enables us to put the well-being of another before our own.

EXAMPLES OF REPRESENTATIVE OUTPUTS: The edited volume, Radical Passivity. Rethinking Ethical Agency in Levinas (Springer, 2009) is certainly one of the crowning achievements of my research on the concept of 'radical passivity', through which I managed to secure a niche research agenda that have earned me respect among the top Levinas scholars in the world. The list of contributors to this volume attest to this (incl. Adriaan Peperzak, Alphonso Lingis, Betina Bergo and Sean Hand) as well as the peer recognition I have received by way of citations, invitations to inter- and national research fora and to contribute to edited books and journal issues in the field. One of the book reviewers hailed the volume as one of the first incisive works of what is undoubtedly an imminent wave of critical secondary literature on Levinas.

Another representative output is the Monokl article (2010) in which I excavate the subject's oscillation between self-concern (activity) and other-responsiveness (passivity). The last few decades have been characterised by an overwhelming preoccupation with ethical concerns in a diversity of fields (including but not limited to Continental Philosophy). Levinas's thinking was certainly instrumental in the current resurgence of ethics, which has established concern for the Other as the virtually uncontested cornerstone of ethics. This article offers a critical reevaluation of Levinas's work distinguishing between his later work (with its emphasis on the Other) and his early works (with its emphasis on the self as necessary condition for assuming our responsibility towards the Other). Such a reevaluation therefore provides a critical framework for fostering the recovery of ethics in and beyond the sphere of Continental philosophy.

Other outputs that belong in this category are the two articles (Filozofia, 2012 and Philosophia, 2016) in which I attempt to comprehend Levinas's conception of Being and the interrelatedness of ontology and ethics, of Being and Otherwise-than-Being. The article on the enigma of ethical responsiveness published in Humanities & Social Sciences in 2016 also fits within this framework.

(3) The above two-pronged approach brought me face-to-face time and again with the necessary entanglement or conjunction of the ethical and the political and resulted in what may be termed the ETHICO-POLITICAL SIDE. Do these ethico-theoretical conceptual tools function in the socio-political world of action? And, inversely, how does the socio-political reality of praxis mar the practicability of theory?

EXAMPLES OF REPRESENTATIVE OUTPUTS: My 2009 book chapter in which I undertake a Levinasian analysis of the functioning of the veil – as concealment of the face; the 2014 article on the impact of Facebook on Levinas's conception of the 'face' – as screening of the face by way of intermediality; as well as the 2009 article on the public role of the intellectual may be grouped here. Most significant in my opinion is the 2016 article published in the British Journal of Phenomenology in which I investigate to what extent a productive encounter between Levinas's thought and non-Western postcolonial ethical frameworks and conceptions of difference and alterity is possible. In this article a question re-emerges in my research that was first articulated almost 15 years ago in my very first research output published in 2002. In that first article, two discourses were analysed, each of which outlining a certain interaction or proposed interaction between Africa and the Western world by way of global capitalism: "What I am interested in, philosophically speaking, is how this translates into different interactions between the Self and the Other, and with that I inevitably arrive at my ethical question: How does non-reductive communication between the Self and the Other become possible? In following Levinas, I started with the premise that when confronted by the Other I am ethically obligated to respond, but a response invariably amounts to a violation of his/her alterity. I found myself facing an insurmountable dilemma: both silence and response amount to violence. At this critical juncture, I attempted to deconstruct the two poles of our binary opposition, with the hope of going, with Nietzsche, beyond the proverbial 'good and evil' duality. It would seem, then, that my research has come the proverbial full circle although the inherent contingency of context, of identity and alterity, means that the circle can never be closed, that this line of research inquiry is far from – if ever – exhausted!

(2) INTERNATIONAL NETWORKS & SCHOLARLY RECOGNITION

Apart from my decade long affiliation with the Radboud University Nijmegen, I have also held a research fellowship at the Centre for Research in Modern European Philosophy, Middlesex University (now Kingston), London, UK in 2004. I have organised one national (2008) and two international conferences (both in 2006). The international interest and collaboration sparked by these conferences as well as the three volumes I edited strongly testify to my ability to establish and maintain fruitful international networks. At present, I am also working towards establishing stronger ties with colleagues at Konstanz University, Germany with whom we have been collaborating on the curriculum development of the MA programme in African-European Cultural Relations. The numerous (inter-)national research scholarships and awards, collaborative book and research projects, as well as invitations to present my research findings at research forums both locally and abroad clearly indicate that the quality and value of my research are recognised by my peers. Within the context of South Africa, the award of a National Research Foundation Research Rating, which is based on extensive national and international peer-review, is considered as a definitive indicator of an academic's research standing and recognition.

(4) EXTERNAL EXAMINER & REFEREE FOR SCIENTIFIC JOURNALS

My research expertise has also been acknowledged by numerous invitations to act as referee and/or reviewer for (inter-)national accredited and/or peer-reviewed journals (see pp. 19-20 for a complete list). I regularly act as external examiner for the Universities of Stellenbosch, Johannesburg, Northwest and South Africa. Upon invitation I have also evaluated numerous programmes for the Council for Higher Education and have done scientific journal accreditation evaluation for the Academy of Science of South Africa.

13.3 Community engagement

As a philosopher specialising in the fields of Practical Continental Philosophy (philosophical ethics and social responsibility), I continuously strive to serve the wider South African community by way of my expertise. This is accomplished in the following ways:

- the regular presentation of informal talks and participation in Philosophy discussion groups outside of the university;
- a committed effort to formulate curriculum outcomes that match community opportunities;
- to provide conceptual/theoretical support upon request to those departments, centres, students and staff directly involved in community engagement projects (e.g. help them identify best practice and procedures);
- to volunteer my services and expertise in Philosophy to newly established independent educational institutes focused on providing bridging education to young people from disadvantaged backgrounds;
- an ongoing commitment to help learners from a disadvantaged background (1) to gain entry to University education based on RPL (Recognition of Prior Learning) regardless of where and how the learning was attained; and (2) to secure the necessary funding by acting as reference and assisting them with the application procedure.
- Along with my colleague in the Department of Internal Auditing, Faculty of Management and Business Science, Professor Kato Plant, I regularly present courses to governmental and private institutions and agencies in the field of Ethics and Governance in the Workplace via Enterprises@UP (the commercial 'wing' of the University of Pretoria that offer courses beyond the context of university teaching).
